Public Space Environments

Create calm in places that are anything but.

Crowds. Activity. Noise. For some people, these can feel like assaults on their senses, preventing them from participating in activities. Even people without sensory processing issues can feel overwhelmed in large or busy environments such as community centers, amusement parks, and even houses of worship or libraries. A Snoezelen® room can offer a welcome respite where users can find calm and control.

Solutions for EVERY SENSE.

VISUAL

Provides us with details about what we see and helps us to define boundaries as our brain processes color, contrast, shape, and movement.

AUDITORY

Provides us with details about the sounds we hear such as volume, pitch, rhythm, tone, and sequence.

TACTILE

Keeps us in contact with our surroundings. Touch is vital to our survival and is one of our modes of communication. From head to toe, our skin helps us feel temperature, light touch, deep pressure, vibration, pain, and so much more.

VESTIBULAR

This sense puts balance into our lives. It provides information about movement, gravity, and changing head positions. It tells whether we're moving or still, as well as the direction and speed of our movement. We may even tell whether we are vertically or horizontally positioned—even with our eyes closed.

PROPRIOCEPTION

This sense processes information from our muscles, joints, and other body parts to provide us with an unconscious awareness of the position of our body parts in relation to each other—and their relation to other people and objects.

Every Snoezelen product is designed to engage a variety of senses.
